RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

Overview:

Research experience in marine and estuarine ecology, with extensive fieldwork in subtidal and intertidal systems, in aquatic environments ranging from subtropical to arctic

Proficient in scientific communication and engagement, including publishing in scholarly journals, presenting at conferences, organising workshops, and coordinating outreach activities

Multi-institutional partnerships with academic, government, and museum researchers, as well as stakeholder engagements with non-profits, industry, and Indigenous communities

Current postdoctoral research focused on investigating the patterns and processes of biodiversity in the rocky intertidal and how this system responds to the effects of climate change

My research interests: coastal biogeography, supply-side ecology, species interactions, biological invasions, biological diversity, and taxonomy of marine invertebrates

Research history:

2025 – Present Postdoctoral Research Fellow (Sentinels of Change Alliance), University of British Columbia
Presently carrying out a research program on the ecology of intertidal habitats to uncover patterns and processes shaping intertidal biodiversity, with particular a particular interest on understanding how this system responds to the effects of climate change. Academic advisors: Christopher D.G. HARLEY & Alyssa-Lois M. GEHMAN

2022 – 2024 Postdoctoral Fellow (Mitacs Accelerate), Memorial University of Newfoundland
Conducted applied and fundamental research on sea cucumbers focusing on anomalous morphological phenomena, disease, parasitism, excretion of metabolic wastes, population dynamics, and fisheries science. Gained experience with under-ice ROV surveys, laboratory management, and animal husbandry. Engaged in community outreach with Indigenous groups and supervised of undergraduate students. Academic advisor: Annie MERCIER

2019 – 2022 Postdoctoral Research Fellow (NRF Bursary), Rhodes University
Carried out research on the biogeography of marine invertebrates on rocky shores, focusing on range edge dynamics, range shifts, and species interactions. Reconstructed historical patterns of spread by invasive species. Investigated the relationship of endolithic infestation and epibiont load on mussels. Described a newly identified bryozoan species. Supervised undergraduate students. Academic advisors: Christopher D. MCQUAID & P. William FRONEMAN

2013 – 2019 PhD Candidate (NSERC CAISN II), Université Laval
Investigated the distribution and abundance of benthic invertebrates across multiple spatial and temporal scales to optimise field sampling strategies for early detection of marine invasive species. Conducted field studies on the relationship between larval supply and settlement patterns. Academic advisors: Ladd E. JOHNSON & Christopher W. MCKINDSEY

2012 Research Assistant (NSERC CAISN II), Université du Québec à Rimouski
Assisted with field logistics and fieldwork for studies on the composition of biofouling assemblages and recruitment patterns under different climate scenarios. Contributed to the discovery of several marine invertebrate species invading the Canadian Maritimes. Principal investigators: Christopher W. MCKINDSEY & Claudio DIBACCO

2009 – 2012 MSc Candidate (NSERC Supplemental Strategic Grant), Memorial University of Newfoundland
Carried out research on the larval settlement patterns and population dynamics of an invasive ascidian. Developed best practices for the management and eradication of invasive ascidians. Performed a literature review on the diversity and distribution of native and non-native ascidians in eastern Canada. Academic advisors: Don DEIBEL & Cynthia H. MCKENZIE

2007 – 2008 Undergraduate Research Assistant (HRSDC & NSERC USRA), University of British Columbia
Assisted in identifying critical marine habitats through field-based interviews with resource users. Supported investigations into long-term ecological changes by collecting and processing historical and contemporary abundance data of marine invertebrates from published sources. Principal investigators: Kai M.A. CHAN & M. L. Deng PALOMARES
